Though "sliced bread" gets the credit, we all know that it is ice cream that deserves the honor of being the world's best invention. That is probably why on July 9, 1984, former US President Ronald Reagan declared July, National Ice Cream Month, and the third Sunday of the month, National Ice Cream Day. According to Proclamation number 5219, the event should be observed "with appropriate ceremonies and activities." This, of course, means eating as much of the creamy treat as possible. Given that the US dedicates an entire month to ice cream, it should come as no surprise that it is the country's favorite dessert — One that generates manufacturers an astounding $10 billion USD annually. A 2015 study conducted by Yahoo Food found that 86% of the population eat the treat at least once a week. Also, despite the rise in unusual flavors, chocolate and vanilla remain the most popular! Finally, it takes an average consumer fifty licks to devour a scoop. So the next time you are eating the treat be sure to test if your ice cream eating skills are just "average" or "outstanding!"
